

Unique Opportunity for Creative Scientists

The Discovery Channel is looking for talented hosts (men and women) for its next long running hit series. They are searching for talented individuals who have a strong background in any of the following areas:

- Science
- Engineering
- Urban water, power, or transportation systems
- Wilderness survival
- DIY
- Animal science

Women, African-American, Latino, Asian and Native American applicants are especially encouraged to submit. However, the most important element of the search is that:

- The talent must be entertaining with a true, real-life expertise that fits the Discovery Channel paradigm (factual entertainment).
- The talent must have knowledge that comes from action and be able to host a show that is visceral, challenging, and exciting.
- There should be a never before seen quality that allows the audience to learn from the experiences of the host.

The Show:

Hidden Cities:

The city, like you've never seen it. Discovery will assemble a highly experienced team of adventurers who will use a combination of their extraordinary skills and unparalleled knowledge to give our audience a view of city life they have never seen. Via their unconventional exploration and hosting techniques Hidden Cities will reveal the inner workings of the most essential elements of urban life through the structures and infrastructures that make the city work, whilst awe-inspiringly uncovering the history behind them. The show will examine such essential elements of urban life as water, power, and transportation, among others.

Please contact Discovery ASAP with your contact info, a brief bio, a picture, and the reason why you are Discovery Network's next star. Also send a video link of any television appearances or video reel you may have.

Good luck!
